Bread Loaf is a summer campus of Middlebury College located in the Green Mountains about twelve miles from Middlebury. In addition to the Writers' Conference, summer activities at Bread Loaf include a six-week session of the Bread Loaf School of English, a graduate school of English literature offering Master of Arts and Master of Letters degrees.

The Conference program is an intensive twelve days of workshops, discussions, lectures, panels, readings and individual conferences. In addition to the resident Staff of writers, there are visiting editors, agents and publishers who talk about writing as a trade or profession.

For those who enjoy outdoor life, Bread Loaf is ideally situated. There are hiking, swimming, tennis near and at Bread Loaf, which is an isolated, self-sufficient community of about 250 people, all of whom are committed to the talk about writing.

Financial Aid:

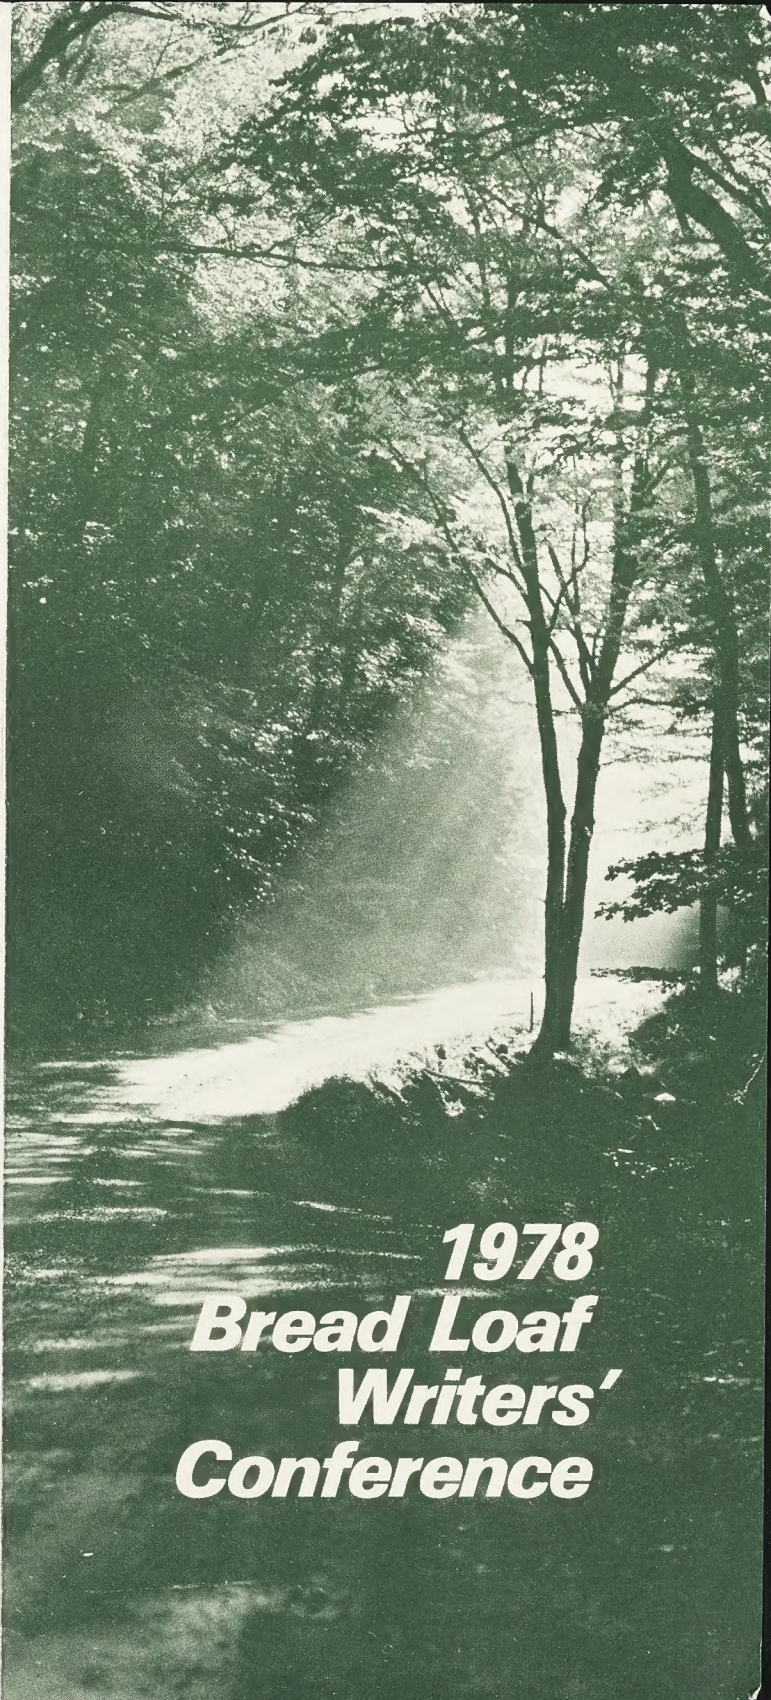

Fellowships and Scholarships: Fellowships pay all regular Conference charges, but not traveling expenses. Normally, scholarships are for full or partial tuition.

The policies by which Fellowships and scholarship assistance are awarded are contained in the Conference Bulletin. Put briefly, personal applications are not accepted: candidates are nominated by an editor, teacher, literary agent or well-known writer. Deadline for nomination is March 15, except the working scholarships, for which nomination is not necessary.

There are twenty-four working scholarships for young persons willing to earn room, board, and part of their tuition by waiting on table. These scholarships are awarded in a competition to those who show unusual promise as writers. Application blanks may be obtained by writing to the Conference Secretary.
